RODION SHCHEDRIN

CENTRED IN RUSSIAN CULTURE AND EVERYWHERE AT HOME: AN ŒUVRE IN AN INTERPLAY BETWEEN EMPATHY AND IRONY

Rodion Konstantinovich Shchedrin is deeply rooted in Russian culture, both spiritually and emotionally. His music has thus been able to grow to great heights high and branch out in many directions. The œuvre of this composer has no gradual development forward, no tentative beginning, no succession of early, main and late works. Everything is there from the very beginning – a variety of genres and styles, spiritual richness, originality, virtuosity, the spirit of invention, masterly instrumentation and the power of authenticity. A special characteristic which is most striking, perhaps a trademark of his production, is the interplay between empathy and irony.

These two poles – empathy as well as distance – are probably due to the composer's origins. He was born in Moscow as the son of a musician and grandson of an Orthodox priest, and he virtually inherited both spiritual independence and critical awareness of the world. Rodion Shchedrin says that he "digested a lot of avant-garde" but was not "confused by it or made compliant to it."

"The piano concerto was always my field of experimentation."

Paths of world music and European modernism cross in the piano concertos. Himself a brilliant pianist and organist, Rodion Shchedrin made solo appearances as the interpreter of his own works, beginning his career in this personal union in 1955 with the premiere of his Piano Concerto No. 1, which plays with Russian folklore in a manner both emphatic and ironic.

Piano Concerto No. 2 belongs to Shchedrin's "experiments with twelve-tone techniques and jazz." He enjoyed a brilliant success with it in 1967 as composer and pianist during a European tour of the Leningrad Philharmonic conducted by Evgeny Mravinsky. In the Piano Concerto No. 3 consisting of 33 variations that only find their theme at the end, Shchedrin was inspired by the "phenomenon of notated aleatorics." The premiere in 1974 was a sensation when the composer played all three piano concertos in a tour de force single evening.

Piano Concerto No. 4, commissioned in 1991 by Steinway to celebrate the 100th anniversary of the company's founding, bears the subtitle 'sharp keys.' Shchedrin understood his exclusive use of the sharp keys as "his kind of musical minimalism." It keeps an appropriate distance from the current fashionable trend, of course, for the harmonic restriction does not lead to any limitation or to endless successions of the same thing; on the contrary, the composer makes magic, enchanting the listener with timbral effects and thematic variety.

“I have written music for the piano throughout my entire creative life.”

Shchedrin's piano compositions are dialogues with a final authority about the relationship between “ordo tonalis and ordo divinas,” between the order of the tones and the divine order. In the musical heaven of the Orthodox Christian Russian composer rules the Protestant German composer Johann Sebastian Bach. The 24 Preludes and Fugues for Piano written between 1964 and 1970 and the Polyphonic Notebook of 1972 (25 Preludes for Piano) reflect this guiding star; they are encyclopaedias of musical forms, homages to music for its own sake far removed for any marketable attitude.

CONCERTOS FOR ORCHESTRA: WIT, IRONY AND DEEPER MEANING

With his concertos for orchestra, Shchedrin created a genre of his own far removed from the cyclical symphonic form. In a single, unstoppable forward movement, monothematic events are blended with a variety of motifs, and the old technique of variation brings core motifs to the point of ‘explosion’ with a considerably new dynamism.

Number One of the concertos for orchestra (Naughty Limericks / Osorniye chashushki) of 1963, is also the Number One in the favour of public and interpreters alike. George Balanchine made use of the Naughty Limericks as ballet music, and they enthralled Leonard Bernstein so much that he commissioned Shchedrin to write another concerto for orchestra, The Chimes of 1968, masterly not only in its use of colour. With empathy with the old Russian bell sounds and distance from blind nostalgia, the concerto “ends in the exploitation of the ringing of the chimes.”

The concertos for orchestra Old Russian Circus Music and Round Dances, composed to commissions from the USA, are also in the tradition of these one-movement, programmatically charged orchestral concertos.

SYMPHONIES „Eternity is in love with the phenomenon of time“

Shchedrin has called his two symphonies „resonances of the past.“ The echo of the war, the outbreaks of violence and aggression as well as his own emotional entanglement in hate and fear are their subjects, not brushed aside since the end of the Second World War and ensuring both symphonies a place in the international repertoire.

Symphony No. 1 (1958) stands in opposition to traditional structure with its „movements in the wrong order.“ Then there is a highly unconventional tone, striking for its wildness and aggression. The language of a distraught subject is audible beyond all classical balance.

Symphony No. 2 (1962-1965) continues this theme. Cast in 25 preludes overlapping into each other, musical „eternity“ appears in the form of double fugue and cancrizans canon: the „phenomenon of time“ in sonorous, onomatopoetic elements and thematic contrasts.

OPERAS

*„... from humour, exuberance and caustic sarcasm,
it is only half a step to desperation, mourning and tears“*

Shchedrin's subjective tendency, his alternation between empathy and distance, find their correspondence in everyday life in Russia, namely in the so-called Chastushki, „a form of Russian improvised singing in villages that only originated in the twentieth century (...) in which, from humour, exuberance and caustic sarcasm, it is only half a step to desperation, mourning and tears.“

Chastushki found exemplary theatrical formation in Shchedrin's opera Not Love Alone (1961, reduced version 1972). At the suggestion of Kyril Kondrashin, Shchedrin adapted this masterly, at times joking and at other times tragic operatic music into an orchestral suite, ensuring its presence in the concert hall. Whoever wishes to abandon himself/herself to the magic of Russian folk art will find a great deal on offer in the first two operas of Shchedrin (Not Love Alone and Dead Souls).

To an extent hardly equalled by any other composer of his time, Shchedrin, who is also a trained choral conductor, knows the possibilities and special characteristics of the human voice. In hardly any other opera is there such enormous vocal variety and differentiation as in Dead Souls based on Nikolai Gogol, composed in 1974 and representing Shchedrin's principal theatrical work. This was a composition that he simply had to write, tackling it and completing without knowing whether or not it would ever be performed. Yuri Temirkanov finally performed the opera with great success at the Mariinsky Theatre in St. Petersburg, also recording it for commercial release.

The psychic nature and differentiated character exploration of Shchedrin's operatic figures is, unlike with many of his contemporaries, depicted not so much through spacious orchestral discourse – his characters gain their unmistakeable guises primarily through the line of the vocal parts – the person is present from the first sung tone onwards. In this way, he creates numerous roles with weight and profile, especially for altos and mezzo sopranos. The choir also forms exciting sound events: pulsing, iridescent sounds such as wind, darkness, light and the rumble of thunder. Both the choir and the orchestra are more than merely prompters, but are active, equal partners of the soloists. Instead of the first violins and second violins, there is a 28-part chamber choir plus two soloists (mezzo soprano and alto) in the Russian manner of 'larynx singing.'

If archaic heterophony is linked with the twelve-tone principle in the orchestra pit, two plots take place at the same time on the theatrical level - an opera buffa an opera seria. One after the other as in Richard Strauss' Ariadne auf Naxos, but simultaneously, parallel, interrupting and blending with each other. The opera Dead Souls is definitely of an unmistakeably Russian essence and of international format.

BALLETS

„an individual solution for each subject“

The composer is not only bound in a marriage of many years to Maya Plisetskaya, the legendary prima ballerina of the Bolschoi Theatre, but also in a creative communion. He wrote all his ballet scores for Maya Plisetskaya: The Little Humpbacked Horse (1960, based on Russian folk tales), Carmen Suite (1967, based on Georges Bizet), Anna Karenina (1972, based on Lev Tolstoy), The Seagull and The Lady with the Lapdog (1980 and 1985, both based on Anton Chekhov). They are all represented in the international ballet repertoire and, like the Romantic Music Anna Karenina of 1978/1979, have also found their place in the concert hall.

The Carmen Suite for strings and percussion, a brilliant arrangement of material from Bizet's opera with the addition of two excerpts from Bizet's Arlésienne music and the opera La Jolie Fille de Perth, is one of the most frequently performed ballet scores in the world.

With its subtitle 'Lyric Scenes,' Anna Karenina refers to Tchaikovsky's opera Evgeny Onegin. Here, Shchedrin has fraternised with the old master of Russian opera and ballet in terms of structure and emphasis, as well as through quotations.

The Seagull consists of 24 preludes, three interludes and a postlude – an unusual musical form for a ballet. There is also a stylised seagull cry as a leitmotif. Shchedrin adapted this ballet score into an orchestral suite for the concert hall in 1984.

In The Lady with the Lapdog, Shchedrin surprises listeners with an „incomplete orchestra“ - strings, two oboes, two horns and celesta – resulting in an „emotionally heated sound.“

Shchedrin created a new kind of ballet music that is orientated according to the needs of dance: clear and transparent in its specification for dancing actions. At the same time, however, it is provided with an overriding network of symphonic-thematic references, thus preserving its independence, offering its own, independent subtext far removed from the concrete action.

CHORAL COMPOSITIONS

„How does one reconcile the transient with the immutable?“

In Northern Europe with its noted choral tradition, Shchedrin is appreciated as a master composer of a capella choral writing second to none. There is no situation that he cannot produce only by means of the sound of a choir, whether turmoil, calmness, suppressed fear or bell sounds such as in The Execution of Pugachyov (1981).

As a composer who spent his childhood in a Russian village, he above all preserves the echo of songs that have faded away, as in the beautiful a capella choruses Willow, Little Willow/Iva, Ivushka (1954) and Russian Villages (1973) or the Concertino, a four-movement masterwork without text for mixed choir as well as the Stanzas from Evgeni Onegin (both 1982).

„My soul, rise up, what are you doing sleeping?“

Shchedrin professes a religious impetus without subjecting himself to church doctrine. Long before it became the fashion to profess Russian Orthodox faith at the time of Perestroika, Shchedrin created works of religious intention.

Among these is Poetorium, a Russian Passion composed in 1968 to verses of the poet Andrei Wossnesensky, a friend and companion of Shchedrin.

„My soul, rise up, what are you doing sleeping?“ Shchedrin expressed this evocation in the choral work The Sealed Angel with text by Nikolai Leskov (1988). It is a valid formula illuminating many of the works.

This is especially true of The Musical Offering for organ, 3 flutes, 3 bassoons and 3 trombones. Composed in 1983 to mark the occasion of the 300th birthday of J. S. Bach,

The Musical Offering, with its performance duration of over two hours, is not merely an homage to the German composer. This is music that does not follow the customary function of art, that does express human trials and tribulations, but seeks access to a final authority and is a more or less „depersonalised“ music. In terms of its duration alone, The Musical Offering is demanding indeed. The composer later decided to shorten the work but without affecting the musical structure of the composition. In times of increasing polarisation concerning questions of faith, Rodion Shchedrin provides an example of the spiritual fellowship of a baptised, devout Russian Orthodox Christian with a Protestant German composer: „My soul, rise up, what are you doing sleeping?“

As with The Musical Offering of 1983, Stikhira (Praise, a Symphonic Adaptation of the Old Slavic Ecclesiastical Chant) of 1988 for the 1000th anniversary celebration of the Christianisation of Russia, is based on the idea of transcending joylessness, fear and abandonment through God's love and praise of God.

Shchedrin designates his musical position as „post avant-garde.“ For him this means „that all the restrictions, all the ‘one mustn't do that,’ ‘that isn't customary,’ ‘they will not approve' have been ruled out. The birds have been released from the cage, one writes as one must and as one feels.“

Rodion Shchedrin and Maya Plisetskaya moved from Moscow to Munich in 1991/1992. All the works of Shchedrin not named in this catalogue have been published by Schott Music Publishers.

RODION SHCHEDRIN

RUSSISCH ZENTRIERT UND UNIVERSELL BEHEIMATET,
EIN WERK IM WECHSELSPIEL VON EMPATHIE UND IRONIE

Rodion Konstantinowitsch Shchedrin ist geistig und emotional tief in der russischen Kultur verwurzelt. So konnte seine Musik hoch hinaus und weit verzweigt wachsen. Es gibt im Schaffen dieses Komponisten kein langsames Voran, kein tastendes Beginnen, keine Folge von Früh-, Haupt- und Spätwerk. Es ist von Anfang an alles da, Vielfalt der Genres und Stile, geistige Fülle, Originalität, Virtuosität, Erfindergeist, meisterhafte Instrumentationskunst und die Kraft des Authentischen. Eine auffallende Besonderheit, vielleicht ein Markenzeichen seines Schaffens ist das Wechselspiel zwischen Empathie und Ironie. Diese beiden Pole – Einfühlung wie Distanz – sind wohl dem Herkommen des Komponisten zu danken, der 1932 in Moskau als Sohn eines Musikers und Enkel eines orthodoxen Priesters geboren wurde und der geistige Selbständigkeit wie kritisches Weltbewusstsein quasi in die Wiege gelegt bekam. Er habe „viel Avantgarde verdaut“, aber sich von ihr „weder irre, noch kirre“ machen lassen, so Rodion Shchedrin.

„Das Klavierkonzert war immer mein Experimentierfeld.“

In den Klavierkonzerten kreuzen sich Wege der Weltmusik und der Europäischen Moderne. Selbst ein glänzender Pianist und Organist, trat Rodion Shchedrin als Interpret eigener Werke solistisch in Erscheinung und begann in dieser Personalunion 1955 seine Karriere mit der Uraufführung seines 1. Klavierkonzertes, einem emphatischen wie ironischen Spiel mit russischer Folklore.

Das 2. Klavierkonzert gehört zu Shchedrins „Experimenten mit der Zwölftontechnik und dem Jazz“. Mit ihm brillierte er 1967 als Komponist und Pianist während einer Europa-tournee der Leningrader Philharmoniker unter der Leitung von Jewgeni Mrawinski.

Beim 3. Klavierkonzert, das aus 33 Variationen besteht, die erst am Ende zu ihrem Thema finden, ließ sich Shchedrin „vom Phänomen der notierten Aleatorik“ inspirieren. Die Uraufführung 1974 war eine Sensation, als der Komponist in einer tour de force an einem einzigen Abend alle drei Klavierkonzerte selbst spielte.

Das 4. Klavierkonzert, ein Auftragswerk von Steinway zum 100. Gründungsjahr der Firma 1991, trägt den Untertitel Kreuztonarten. Die ausschließliche Verwendung von Kreuztonarten verstand Shchedrin als seine „Art des musikalischen Minimalismus“. Natürlich mit der gehörigen Portion Distanz zum gängigen Modetrend, denn die harmonische Einschränkung führt zu keiner Beschränkung, zu keiner unendlichen Folge des Immergleichen, im Gegenteil, der Komponist zaubert und bezaubert, mit Klangfarbeneffekten und thematischer Vielfalt.

„Musik für Klavier habe ich mein ganzes schöpferisches Leben lang geschrieben.“

Shchedrins Klavierkompositionen sind Dialoge mit einer Letzten Instanz über das Verhältnis zwischen 'Ordo tonalis und ordo divinas', zwischen der Ordnung der Töne und der göttlichen Ordnung. Am musikalischen Himmel des christlich-orthodoxen russischen Komponisten herrscht der protestantische deutsche Tonschöpfer Johann Sebastian Bach. Im Zeichen dieses Fixsterns entstanden zwischen 1964 und 1970 24 Präludien und Fugen für Klavier und 1972 das Polyphonisch Spielheft (25 Präludien für Klavier), Enzyklopädien musikalischer Formen, Huldigungen der Musik um ihrer selbst willen, fern jeder marktgängigen Attitüde.

ORCHESTERKONZERTE WITZ, IRONIE UND TIEFERE BEDEUTUNG

Mit seinen Orchesterkonzerten schuf Shchedrin ein eigenes Genre, jenseits der zyklischen sinfonischen Form. In einem einzigen unaufhaltsamen Voran verschmilzt monothematisches mit vielmotivischem Geschehen und die alte Variationstechnik bringt mit neuer beachtlicher Dynamik Kernmotive zum 'explodieren'.

Die Nummer Eins unter den Orchesterkonzerten (Freche Orchesterscherze / Osornije tschastuschi) von 1963 ist auch die Nummer Eins in der Gunst von Publikum und Interpreten. Georg Balanchine dienten die Frechen Orchesterscherze als Ballettmusik, und sie begeisterte Leonard Bernstein so, dass er Shchedrin den Auftrag zu einem weiteren Orchesterkonzert gab, Glockenklang aus dem Jahr 1968, einem nicht nur koloristischen Meisterstück. Einfühlung in den alten russischen Glockenklang und Distanz zu blinder Nostalgie, das Konzert „endet in der Erschießung des Glockengeläuts“. In der Tradition dieser einsätzigen programmatisch aufgeladenen Orchesterkonzerte stehen auch die 1989 für die USA entstanden die Orchesterkonzerte Alte russische Zirkusmusik und Reigen.

SINFONIEN „Die Ewigkeit ist verliebt in das Phänomen der Zeit“

„Resonanzen der Vergangenheit“ nannte Shchedrin seine beiden Sinfonien. Das Echo des Krieges, die Ausbrüche von Gewalt und Aggression sowie die eigene emotionalen Verstrickung in Hass und Angst sind ihre Themen, die mit dem Ende des Zweiten Weltkrieges nicht abgetan sind und den beiden Sinfonien weiterhin einen Platz im Weltrepertoire sichern. Mit „falsch angeordneten Sätzen“ steht die Sinfonie Nr. 1 (1958) im Gegensatz zur traditionellen Struktur. Dazu kommt ein höchst unkonventioneller, durch Wildheit und Aggressivität auffallender Ton. Jenseits jeder klassischen Ausgewogenheit wird die Sprache eines verstörten Subjekts hörbar.

Die 2. Sinfonie (1962-1965) setzt diese Thematik fort. In 25 einander überlappenden Präludien, in Doppelfuge und Krebskanon tritt musikalische „Ewigkeit“ in Erscheinung, in sonoristischen, lautmalerischen Elementen und thematischen Kontrasten „das Phänomen der Zeit“.

*„... von Humor, Ausgelassenheit und ätzendem Spott ist es immer nur
ein halber Schritt bis zur Verzweiflung, zu Klagen und Tränen“*

Shchedrins subjektive Neigung, sein Wechseln zwischen Einfühlung und Distanz, haben im russischen Alltag eine Entsprechung, nämlich in den sogenannten Tschastuschki, „einer erst im 20. Jahrhundert entstandene Form des russischen, dörflichen, improvisierten Gesangs (...) bei der es von Humor, Ausgelassenheit und ätzendem Spott immer nur ein halber Schritt bis zur Verzweiflung, zu Klagen und Tränen“ ist.

Exemplarische theatralische Ausformung fanden die Tschastuschki in Shchedrins Oper Nicht nur Liebe (1961, 1972 reduzierte Fassung). Der meisterhaften, bald scherhaften, bald tragischen Opernmusik hat Shchedrin auf Anregung von Kyrill Kondraschin mit einer Orchestersuite zu konzertantem Dasein verholfen. Wer sich dem Zauber russischer Vokalkunst hingeben möchte, dem haben die beiden ersten Opern Shchedrins (Nicht nur Liebe und Die toten Seelen) viel zu bieten.

Wie kaum ein zweiter Komponist seiner Zeit, weiß Shchedrin, der auch ausgebildeter Chorleiter ist, um die Möglichkeiten und Besonderheiten der menschlichen Stimme. Wohl in keiner anderen Oper ist eine solche enorme stimmliche Vielfalt und Differenziertheit zu finden wie in Die Toten Seelen nach Nikolai Gogol aus dem Jahr 1974, dem theatralischen Hauptwerk Shchedrins. Eine Wunschkomposition, die er in Angriff nahm und zu Ende brachte, ohne zu wissen, ob sie jemals aufgeführt werden würde. Juri Temirkanow brachte die Oper schließlich mit großem Erfolg am Mariinski Theater in St. Petersburg zur Aufführung und spielte sie auch für die Schallplatte ein.

Psychischer Habitus und differenzierte Charakterauslotung der Shchedrinschen Opernfiguren wird, anders als bei vielen Zeitgenossen, weniger durch weitläufige Orchesterrede gezeichnet – seine Gestalten gewinnen vor allem durch die Linie des Vokalparts ihr unverwechselbares Profil – die Person ist vom ersten gesungenen Ton an präsent. Dabei kreiert er zahlreiche Rollen mit Gewicht und Profil besonders für Altistinnen und Mezzosopranne. Aufregende Klangereignisse modelliert auch der Chor, pulsierende, irisierende Klänge, wie Wind, Finsternis, Licht, Donnergrollen. Chor wie Orchester sind mehr als nur Stichwortgeber, sind aktive gleichberechtigte Partner der Solisten. Anstelle von Violine I und Violine II musiziert ein 28stimmiger Kammerchor, dazu zwei Solistinnen (Mezzosopran und Alt) in der russischen Art des ‚Kehlkopfsingens‘.

Ist im Orchestergraben archaische Heterophonie mit dem Prinzip der Zwölftönigkeit verknüpft, laufen auf theatralischer Ebene zwei Handlungen parallel, eine opera buffa und eine opera seria. Nicht nacheinander wie in Richard Strauss' Ariadne auf Naxos, sondern gleichzeitig, parallel, einander unterbrechend und vermischend. Im buchstäblichen Sinne sind Die Toten Seelen von unverkennbar russischem Wesen und internationalem Format.

BALLETTE
„für jedes Thema eine individuelle Lösung“

Mit Maja Pliszezkaja, der legendären Primaballerina des Bolschoi Theater, verbindet den Komponisten nicht nur eine langjährige Ehe, sondern auch eine schöpferische Gemeinschaft. Für Maja Pliszezkaja schrieb er alle seine Ballettmusiken: Das bucklige Pferdchen (1960, nach russischen Volksmärchen), Carmen-Suite (1967, nach Georges Bizet), Anna Karenina (1972, nach Lew Tolstoi), Die Möwe und Die Dame mit dem Hündchen (1980 bzw. 1985, beide nach Anton Tschechow). Sie sind alle im internationalen Ballett-Repertoire vertreten und finden auch im Konzertsaal ihren Platz wie die Romantische Musik Anna Karenina von 1978/1979.

Die Carmen-Suite für Streicher und Schlagzeug, ein brillantes Arrangement von Material aus Bizets Oper unter Hinzufügung zweier Ausschnitte aus Bizets Arlésienne-Musik und der Oper La Jolie Fille de Perth, gehört zu den meistaufgeführten Ballettmusiken weltweit.

Anna Karenina verweist schon mit dem Untertitel ‘Lyrische Szenen’ auf Tschaikowskis Oper Eugen Onegin. Shchedrin hat sich hier in Struktur, Emphase sowie durch Zitate mit dem Altmeister der russischen Oper und des Ballettes verbrüdert.

Die Musik zu Die Möwe, besteht aus einer für ein Ballett ungewöhnlichen musikalischen Form, aus 24 Präludien, drei Interludien und einem Postludium. Dazu kommt als Leitmotiv ein stilisierter Möwenschrei. Shchedrin hat diese Ballettmusik 1984 als Orchestersuite für den Konzertsaal bearbeitet.

Bei Die Dame mit dem Hündchen überrascht Shchedrin mit einem „unvollständig besetzten Orchester“ – Streicher, zwei Oboen, zwei Hörner und Celesta – mit dem Ergebnis eines „emotional-heißen Klangs“.

Shchedrin schuf eine neue Art von Ballettmusik, die auf die Bedürfnisse des Tanzes ausgerichtet ist, klar und transparent in der Vorgabe für tänzerische Aktionen. Gleichzeitig aber ist sie mit einem das Ganze überspannenden Netz sinfonisch-thematischer Bezüge versehen, und bewahrt sich so ihre Selbständigkeit, wartet fern des konkreten Geschehens mit einem eigenen und eigenständigem Subtext auf.

CHORKOMPOSITIONEN
„Wie versöhnt man das Vergängliche und das Unwandelbare?“

Im Norden Europas mit seiner ausgeprägten Chortradition schätzt man Shchedrin als einen Meisterkomponisten des A-cappella-Gesangs, der seinesgleichen sucht. Kein Ereignis, das er nicht allein durch den Chorklang herzustellen wüsste, Aufruhr, Stille, unterdrückte Angst, Glockengeläut wie in Die Hinrichtung des Pugatschow (1981).

Vor allem aber bewahrt er, der seine Kindheit auf dem russischen Dorf verbracht hat, das Echo verklungener Lieder auf, wie in den wunderschönen A-Cappella-Chören Weide, kleine Weide/Iwa, Iwuschka (1954) und Russische Dörfer (1973) oder dem Concertino, einem textlosen viersätzigen Meisterwerk für gemischten Chor sowie den Strophen Eugen Onegin (beide 1982).

„Meine Seele, erhebe dich, was schläfst du?“

Shchedrin bekennt sich zu einem religiösen Impetus, ohne sich einer kirchlichen Doktrin zu unterwerfen. Lange bevor mit der Perestroika das Bekenntnis zum russisch-orthodoxen Glauben eine Mode wurde, schuf Shchedrin religiös intendierte Werke.

Dazu zählt das Po etorium, eine russische Passion, die 1968 auf Verse des Dichters Andrej Wossnesenski entstand, einem Freund und Weggefährten Shchedrins.

„Meine Seele, erhebe dich, was schläfst du?“ Zu dieser Evokation fand Shchedrin in dem Chorwerk Der versiegelte Engel nach Nikolai Leskov (1988). Eine gültige, viele der Werke erhellende Formel.

Dies gilt besonders für Das musikalische Opfer für Orgel, 3 Flöten, 3 Fagotte, 3 Posaunen. 1983 zum 300. Geburtstag von J. S. Bach entstanden, ist Das Musikalische Opfer mit seiner Spieldauer von mehr als zwei Stunden nicht nur eine Hommage auf den deutschen Tonsetzer. Es handelt sich um eine Musik, die nicht der gängigen Funktion von Kunst folgt, die nicht menschliche Irrungen und Wirrungen zum Ausdruck bringt, sondern den Zugang zu einer Letzte Instanz sucht, um eine gleichsam ‘entpersönlichte’ Musik. Allein in Bezug auf die Spieldauer ist Das musikalische Opfer (im positiven Sinn) eine Zumutung. Später entschloss sich der Komponist zu einer Kürzung des Werkes, die jedoch die musikalische Struktur der Komposition nicht antastet. In Zeiten zunehmender Polarisierung von Glaubensfragen gibt Rodion Shchedrin ein Beispiel der geistigen Verbundenheit eines getauften, gläubigen russisch-orthodoxen Christen mit einem protestantischen deutschen Tonschöpfer: „Meine Seele, erhebe dich, was schläfst du?“

Dem Musikalischen Opfer aus dem Jahr 1983 wie Stichira (Lobpreisung, eine Sinfonisierung des altslawischen Kirchengesangs), 1988 zur 1000-Jahr-Feier der Christianisierung Russlands entstanden, liegt der Gedanke zugrunde, Freudlosigkeit, Angst und Verlassenheit durch Gottes-Liebe und Gottes-Lob zu transzendifieren.

Shchedrin bezeichnete seine musikalische Position als ‘postavantgardistisch’. Das bedeutet für ihn, „dass alle Einschränkungen, alles ‘Das darf man nicht’, ‘Das ist nicht üblich’, ‘Das wird man missbilligen’ gestrichen sind. Die Vögel werden aus dem Käfig gelassen, es wird so geschrieben, wie man schreiben muss und wie man empfindet.“

Rodion Shchedrin und Maja Plissetzkaja übersiedelten 1991/1992 von Moskau nach München. Alle Werke Shchedrins, die nicht in diesem Verzeichnis genannt werden, sind beim Musikverlag Schott erschienen.
