MIECZYSŁAW WEINBERG

8 December 1919, Warsaw, – 26 February 1996, Moscow

The composer and pianist Mieczysław Weinberg, the son of a Jewish theatre musician, came into contact with musical practice early in life; already at the age of twelve, he studied piano at the Warsaw Conservatory with Józef Turcyński. He seemed assured of a brilliant concert pianist's career – having already been invited to America – when the Second World War broke out. In 1939 Weinberg fled Warsaw, where his family was murdered shortly afterwards. He studied composition at the Minsk Conservatory with Vassili Zolotarev, but again was forced to flee Hitler's troops, this time to Tashkent (Uzbekistan), where he worked as a rehearsal pianist at the opera. It was here that he became acquainted with the Jewish actor and theatre director Solomon Michailovich Michoëls (1890–1948), whose daughter Natalia Vovsi he married. Weinberg's talent did not go unnoticed in Tashkent; Dmitri Shostakovich heard about him in Moscow; when he was sent a copy of the younger composer's First Symphony, Op. 10 (1942), he was so impressed that he immediately arranged a relocation permit in the capital city for the young couple so that Weinberg might have a better future. Shostakovich considered Weinberg to be one of the best composers and pianists. Their relationship, which lasted for over 30 years, was marked by mutual friendship and respect. They showed each other each new composition and often presented these works – in versions for piano four-hands or on two pianos – for the circle of their colleagues or in public. Like most creators of culture, Weinberg felt Stalinist terror after 1948 (he was imprisoned for three months in early 1953), but was able to live relatively unhindered in the background as a freelance composer. Since he refused to become a party member and join the campaign against 'formalism' he had relatively little official support during the period up to and including the 1960s. He earned his living with incidental compositions. When his works were performed, it was usually at the initiative of renowned interpreters such as Emil Gilels, David Oistrach, Maria Grinberg, Leonid Kogan, Mstislav Rostropovich, Alexander Gauk, Kirill Kondrashin, Kurt Sanderling, the Borodin Quartet and others. Today, Weinberg's extensive oeuvre is enjoying increasing international popularity. Weinberg was a People's Artist of the USSR (1980) and was awarded the State Prize (1990).

Weinberg was an extremely productive composer. From film and circus music to tragic grand opera, from simple melodies with easy accompaniments to complex twelve-tone music, he was a master of all forms, genres and stylistic directions. With virtuosity and elegance, but always judiciously and with balance, he used elements of Jewish, Polish, Russian and Moldavian folk music. He developed a very personal style with a clear, almost classical architecture. His melodic language – at times introverted and meditative-reflective, at other times full of effervescent joy of living – is particularly noted for its special richness.

MIECZYSŁAW WEINBERG

8. Dezember 1919, Warschau, – 26. Februar 1996, Moskau

Der Komponist und Pianist Mieczysław Weinberg kam als Sohn eines jüdischen Theaternmusikers früh mit der Musikpraxis in Berührung und studierte bereits mit zwölf Jahren am Warschauer Konservatorium bei Józef Turcyński Klavier. Eine glänzende Karriere als Pianist schien ihm sicher – er hatte schon eine Einladung nach Amerika –, als der Zweite Weltkrieg ausbrach. Weinberg flüchtete 1939 aus Warschau, wo seine Familie kurze Zeit später ermordet wurde. Am Konservatorium in Minsk studierte er bei Vassili Zolotarëv Komposition, musste aber 1941 erneut vor Hitlers Truppen fliehen, diesmal nach Taschkent (Usbekistan), wo er als Korrepetitor an der Oper arbeitete. Hier lernte er den jüdischen Schauspieler und Theaterdirektor Solomon Michailowitsch Michoëls (1890-1948) kennen und heiratete dessen Tochter Natalja Vovsi. Das Talent Weinbergs blieb in Taschkent nicht unbemerkt; auf Umwegen erfuhr D. Schostakowitsch in Moskau davon, und als er dessen erste Symphonie op. 10 (1942) zugeschickt bekam, war er so beeindruckt, dass er dem Paar sofort eine Zuzugsgenehmigung in die Hauptstadt besorgte, um dem jungen Komponisten eine bessere Zukunft zu ermöglichen. Schostakowitsch schätzte Weinberg als einen der besten Komponisten und Pianisten. Freundschaft und Respekt voreinander prägten ihre über 30jährige Beziehung. Sie zeigten sich gegenseitig jede neue Komposition und stellten diese häufig gemeinsam – vierhändig oder an zwei Klavieren – im Kollegenkreis oder öffentlich vor. Nach 1948 bekam Weinberg wie die meisten Kulturschaffenden den Stalinistischen Terror zu spüren (Anfang 1953 war er drei Monate in Haft), konnte aber relativ unbehelligt und bescheiden im Hintergrund als freischaffender Künstler leben. Da er sich weigerte, Parteimitglied zu werden und sich der Kampagne gegen den ‚Formalismus‘ anzuschließen, erfuhr er bis in die 1960er Jahre wenig Unterstützung von offizieller Seite. Mit Gelegenheitskompositionen bestritt er seinen Lebensunterhalt. Wenn er aufgeführt wurde, so meist nur auf Initiative namhafter Interpreten wie Emil Gilels, David Oistrach, Maria Grinberg, Leonid Kogan, Mstislav Rostropowitsch, Alexander Gauk, Kirill Kondrashin, Kurt Sanderling, dem Borodin-Quartett und anderen. Heute erfreut sich Weinbergs umfangreiches Œuvre stetig wachsender internationaler Beliebtheit. Weinberg war Volkskünstler der UdSSR (1980) und Staatspreisträger (1990).

Weinberg war ein äußerst produktiver Komponist. Von der Film- und Zirkusmusik bis zur großen tragischen Oper, von einer einfachen Melodie mit anspruchsloser Begleitung bis hin zu komplizierter Zwölftonmusik beherrschte er alle musikalischen Formen, Gattungen und Stilrichtungen. Mit Virtuosität und Eleganz, dabei aber behutsam und stets ausgewogen, nutzte er Elemente der jüdischen, polnischen, russischen und moldawischen Volksmusik. Er entwickelte einen sehr persönlichen Stil mit einer klaren, geradezu klassischen Architektur. Seine Melodik – mal introvertiert, meditativ-reflektierend, mal voll übersprudelnder Lebensfreude – zeichnet sich durch besonderen Reichtum aus.
